

Master of Science in Human Resource Management

Successful organizations recognize their employees as their most valuable asset, providing the skill, knowledge, and commitment that brings true worth to the organization. This realization has placed human resource management at the forefront of organizational leadership as vital to organizational performance.

Acknowledging the strategic role of human resource management within organizations, the Master of Science in Human Resources Management program at Colorado Christian University focuses on the methodologies and practices that are proven to secure and maintain a workforce that will maximize efficiency in functionality and operational effectiveness.

The 100% online master's program focuses on planning and acquisition of talent, emerging trends, aligning employee performance with organizational goals, global talent management, labor relations, decision making with data and analytics, ethics, legalities, and contemporary challenges.

The Human Resource Management master's program will instill you with the knowledge and tools necessary to become an integral part of organizational leadership and the decision-making team. The program's breadth will cover the responsibilities, challenges, and competencies that contribute to effective human resource management.

At CCU, faith is incorporated into every course, ensuring that you will be prepared not only to lead but to do so with ethics and in alignment with God's plan.
